Topic: Jean-Michel Basquiat
Creative Director: Sarah Park
Designer: Kyle Chang

Notes:

- Overall, I think it's a nice, clean website that is very similar to what I envisioned.
- I was thinking the logo in the navigation bar could be one of his symbols like the crown for example. But I think it's good to leave the JMB or Jean Michel Basquiat next to the logo for more clarity when viewing the website. (but I think after putting the logo in, you can take the years out of the navigation)
- I like the subheadings but I think they could become a little bigger in size → the ones in the same point size of "Artist/ New York/ 1960-1988"
- I like the main heading typeface but I think the script one (in red) could be something less round but more sketchy or rough but still readable. Something like Permanent Marker or Chalky style (you don't have to use either of these but just as a reference!)
- I really like the bold type choices in mockup B!
- I like how you added the citations in the footer, very clean.
- It might be nice to have a simple button to maybe click to go to the certain page for each of the sections in the home page.
- Color: I envisioned it more like the mockup A but I'm really enjoying the black and yellow color scheme in the mockup B → We think A is predictable, B is bold and eye-catching.
- For the mobile,
    - I think the navigation pop-up is working well → clean and differentiated through color.
    - I think as long as you have the menu next to the + sign it should be good!
